In the practical part of this course, the students will work on the creation of the macro- and microstructure of a specialized dictionary and will design, prepare, present and recommend their solutions and ideas for creating the entries of such a dictionary. The students will conduct their own research of linguistic data collected via language corpora; analyse and edit the collected data and use the acquired skills to create, plan, suggest, prepare and organize other lexicographic works. To recognize, explain, and identify the main features of different dictionary types, the main periods in the development of the English lexicographic tradition (in both the British and the American context); to use the examples of dictionaries and dictionary entries to compare, identify, evaluate and distinguish the main features of the most important works in English lexicography; to plan, formulate, and organize the structure of a specialized dictionary and to present and recommend the solutions for creating the entries of such a dictionary.

Conditions for permission to take the exam	There are two conditions that a student needs to meet to take the final exam – obtaining a passing grade in both mid-terms and obtaining a passing grade from the seminar. Taking the mid-term is mandatory for all students. The mid-term grades can be negative, in which case the student must write an essay on one of the selected topic(s). When choosing the topic and the appropriate reading materials for it, the students will consult their course instructor. The essay for the 1 st mid-term must be submitted before taking the 2 nd mid-term, and the essay for the 2 nd mid-term must be submitted before the Course end date. In case of justified absences from the mid-terms, the students have the same obligations as in the case of obtaining a failing grade from the mid-term. Unjustified absences will be graded with zero (0) points. A student cannot take the final exam without obtaining a grade from both mid-terms. Due to specific epidemiological situations (COVID 19 disease) during the exam periods, final oral exams might be organized.

Course content	The course provides insight into: the area(s) within the field of linguistics in which the theoretical foundations and practical applications of lexicography are anchored; the main goals and aims of lexicographic research (both theoretical and applied); types of dictionaries and their features; the fundamental issues in lexicography; parts and features of dictionary macro- and microstructure; basic features of key periods in the development of English lexicographic tradition and the main representatives of the British and American lexicography; the current state of lexicographic production of monolingual and multilingual, general, linguistic, and specialized dictionaries of the English language; a comparison of achievements of English and Croatian monolingual and multilingual practice in the 20th and the 21st century. The practical part of the course course also offers an overview of different types of language corpora and their use in lexicography, basic and advanced functions for searching the corpora, methods for downloading and editing the corpus-collected linguistic data and using the data in lexicographic activities; an overview of spreadsheet and text processing software, basic and advanced functions for processing and editing corpus-collected data for creating dictionaries and dictionary entries. Through use of these computer methods, the course enables the students to conduct individual research and generate their own lexicographic works. All students will describe their own dictionary entries in front of their colleagues and instructors (the timeline of the creation, the structure of the entry, difficulties they encountered, etc.) and their work will be graded through discussion/analysis of the entries they created. Mid-terms are obligatory for all students. The grades obtained through the seminar paper and the final exam have to be positive, while mid-term grades can be negative. In case of a negative mid-term grade, the student will have to write and submit an essay through which they will show that they understand the materials from which they obtained a failing grade. Form 1.3.2. Syllabus

All forms of unethical behaviour will result in a negative grade in the course without the possibility of compensation or repair. In case of serious violations the Rulebook on Disciplinary Responsibility of Students at the University of Zadar will be applied.

In electronic communications only messages coming from known addresses with a first and a last name, and which are written in the Croatian standard and appropriate academic style, will be responded to.

This course uses the Merlin system for e-learning, so students are required to have an AAI account. /delete if necessary/
